Helping African-American Students with ADHD Succeed

Featuring Anita Stoddard, EdD

Listen Now

The African-American community is affected by ADHD at the same rate as other communities in the United States. However, barriers to evaluation and treatment for children with ADHD remain. Dr. Anita Stoddard discusses how we can overcome those barriers and create opportunities for success for African-American children. Dr. Stoddard shares her perspective on how ADHD affects the students in her elementary school and community.

Anita Stoddard, EdD, is the principal of Doswell E. Brooks Elementary School in Capitol Heights, Maryland, a predominantly African-American school.

Survey Opportunity For Parents of Teens

PillSmart is conducting phone surveys with parents of adolescent children prescribed with stimulant medication. This survey is organized by PillSmart research, supported by the National Institute on Drug Abuse, and would like to learn about the daily needs of parents in managing their child's stimulant medication as well as their concerns around safety of stimulants. Eligible parents can earn a $30 Amazon Gift Card after completing a 30-45 minute survey over the phone. Responses will be confidential and anonymous. The information collected in the survey will be used to help improve the safety of stimulant treatments while mitigating the burden of care for parents. After filling out the screening form, you will be contacted by email in 1-2 days to schedule a phone call survey, if eligible. For all inquiries, please visit the link above or send email to research@pillsmart.org.

This survey is not related to CHADD's National Resource Center on ADHD.
